World Development Report 2007 Development And The Next Generation:

World Development Report 2009 World Bank,2008-11-04 Rising densities of human settlements migration and transport to reduce distances to market and specialization and trade facilitated by fewer international divisions are central to economic development The transformations along these three dimensions density distance and division are most noticeable in North America Western Europe and Japan but countries in Asia and Eastern Europe are changing in ways similar in scope and speed World Development Report 2009 Reshaping Economic Geography concludes that these spatial transformations are essential and should be encouraged The conclusion is not without controversy Slum dwellers now number a billion but the rush to cities continues Globalization is believed to benefit many but not the billion people living in lagging areas of developing nations High poverty and mortality persist among the world's bottom billion while others grow wealthier and live longer lives Concern for these three billion often comes with the prescription that growth must be made spatially balanced The WDR has a different message economic growth is seldom balanced and efforts to spread it out prematurely will jeopardize progress The Report documents how production becomes more concentrated spatially as economies grow proposes economic integration as the principle for promoting successful spatial transformations revisits the debates on urbanization territorial development and regional integration and shows how today's developers can reshape economic geography

World Development Report 2008 World Bank,2007 This work will focus on three themes namely identifying new sources of growth for agriculture making agriculture more effective for poverty reduction and managing the transitions that accompany the transformation of agriculture as economies develop Development and the Next Generation

,2006-01-01 World Development Report 2007 discusses priorities for government actions across five youth transitions that shape young people's human capital learning working staying healthy forming families and exercising citizenship Within these transitions priorities for investment vary across countries The report highlights three lenses that help assess priorities expanding opportunities enhancing capabilities and providing second chances Expanding opportunities focuses on increasing the quality not just quantity of education smoothing the transition to work and providing young people with a platform for engagement Enhancing capabilities involves making young people aware of the consequences of their actions especially consequences that will affect them much later in life building their decision making skills and giving them the right incentives Providing second chances calls for helping young people recover from missed opportunities through remedial education retraining treatment and rehabilitation

World Development Report 2007 ,2006 The theme of The World Development Report 2007 is youth young people between the ages of 12 to 24 As this population group seeks identity and independence they make decisions that affect not only their own well being but that of others and they do it World Development Report 2007 Emmanuel Jimenez,World Bank,2006 Developing countries which invest in better education healthcare and job training for their young people between the ages of 12 and 24 years of age could produce economic growth and sharply reduced poverty. With 1.3 billion young people now living in the developing world the largest ever youth group in history the report says there has never been a better time to invest in youth because they are healthier and better educated than previous generations and they will join the workforce with fewer dependents because of changing demographics. The report says that young people make up nearly half of the ranks of the world's unemployed and as for example in the Middle East and North Africa region must create 100 million jobs by 2020 in order to stabilize its employment situation. Moreover surveys of young people in East Asia and Eastern Europe and Central Asia carried out as research for the report indicate that access to jobs along with physical security is their biggest concern. Far too many young people some 130 million 15-24 year olds cannot read or write. Secondary education and skill acquisition make sense only if primary schooling has been successful. This is still far from being the case and efforts have to be reinforced in this area. In addition more than 20 percent of firms in countries such as Algeria Bangladesh Brazil China Estonia and Zambia rate poor education and work skills among their workforce. Overcoming this handicap starts with more and better investments in youth. The report highlights three areas to promote better investment in the future: expanding opportunities, enhancing capabilities and providing second chances. Expanding opportunities focuses on increasing the quality of education, smoothing the transition to work and providing young people with a platform for civic engagement. Enhancing capabilities involves making young people aware of the consequences of their actions especially consequences that will affect them much later in life as well as building their decision making skills and giving them the right incentives. Providing second chances calls for helping young people recover from missed opportunities through remedial education, retraining, treatment and rehabilitation.

Economic Growth and Sustainable Development

Peter N. Hesse, 2016-05-26. Economic growth reflected in increases in national output per capita makes possible an improved material standard of living and the alleviation of poverty. Sustainable development popularly and concisely defined as meeting the needs of the present generations without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their needs directly addresses the utilization of natural resources the state of the environment and intergenerational equity. Now in its second edition Economic Growth and Sustainable Development features expanded discussion of income distribution, social capital and the insights of behavioural economics for climate change mitigation. Boxed case studies have been added which explore the impact of economic growth on people and countries in both the developed and developing world. This text addresses the following fundamental questions: What causes economic growth? Why do some countries grow faster than others? What accounts for the extraordinary growth in the world's population over the past two centuries? What are the current trends in population and will these trends continue? How do we measure sustainable development and is sustainable development compatible with economic growth? Why is climate change the greatest market failure of all time? What can be done to mitigate climate change and global warming? With a blend of formal models, empirical evidence, history and policy this text provides a coherent and comprehensive treatment of economic growth and sustainable development. It is suitable for those who study

Delineating an Educational Policy Framework for the Developing Nations in Meeting the Emerging Global Challenges by year 2050 Upali Sedere,2009-06-24 Scientific Essay from the year 2008 in the subject Business economics Economic Policy language English abstract School based general education aught to be a future oriented subject However over the years due to parental and grand parental generations setting policies of education for the younger generation education is always more past oriented than future oriented This trend did not cause much of a problem when the change over time was moderate As Alvin Toffler 1970 says we are in a turning point of human history In the changing perspective in the world with speed of change speed of inventions and speed of knowledge and speed of threat on living education got to change to prepare the next generation to face these new challenges The climatic change depletion of resources growing energy crisis threat of terrorism rapid of growth of population and the changing structure of population are new challenges the young generation would face The world in year 2050 would not be a different place to live Unless and otherwise education policy is framed to address the gloom and doom side of world by 2050 the next generation would face a serious threat of existence The positive futurists show that technology and science will not allow the world to laps its primitive past once again It is clear that science and technology is the only answer to human survival Therefore it is important that education policy makers taking a fresh look at the policy challenges for the future This paper makes an analysis based on the published and documented evidence what policy framework would be required in the developing countries in view of the emerging challenges to ensure a survival of the generations to come Generation of Change United Nations Population Fund,2008 This third edition of the Youth

Supplement to the State of the World Population Report 2008 addresses culture as it shapes and nurtures the lives of young people and shows how young people develop their own subcultures which are often different from and may conflict with the dominant culture It profiles the lives of young women and men from seven cultures and states that programmes need to open space for dialogue between generations The Supplement points out that culturally sensitive approaches should equip development programmes to help make human rights and gender equality a reality in all societies and young people their most visible champions

Development and the Next Generation Gudrun Kochendörfer-Lucius,Boris Pleskovic,2007 The Berlin Workshop Series is a forum for the discussion of issues in development that are likely to have enduring relevance for research and policymaking These discussions are the building blocks to develop the framework which shapes the World Development Report It brings together key decision makers and researchers from the United States Europe and developing countries to discuss and brainstorm on development challenges
