Networked RFID George Roussos,2008-10-17 The birth of RFID technology is credited to the 1948 research paper by H Stockman on Communication by Means of Re ected Power 109 After describing the main principle of communication by re ection and reporting his experiments he concluded that Evidently considerable research and development work has to be done before the remaining basic problems in re ected power comnication are solved and before the eld of useful applications is plored It turns out that in fact this work required almost 60 years of science and engineering before it was mature enough to nd its way into large scale plications This is surprising as at rst glance RFID is a simple technology that is straightforward to implement And yet its dull appearance hides great complexity RFID involves several engineering disciplines including systems networking and software development antenna design radio propagation tegratedcircuittechniquesincreasinglyfocusedonprintedelectronics receiver design encryption and security protocols and materials technology to m tion but a few In this book I attempt to present the main ingredients for building c plete network RFID systems written for a knowledgable computing audience I hope this book will help practitioners and researchers alike in establishing a robust framework for thinking about rfid I also hope that the book will help anyone involved with rfid technology to make informed decisions that are appropriate for their particular problem at hand
