Textual Analysis | Guide, 3 Approaches & Examples

Textual analysis is a broad term for various research methods used to describe, interpret and understand texts. All kinds of information can be gleaned from a text — from its literal meaning to the subtext, symbolism, assumptions, and values it reveals.

The methods used to conduct textual analysis depend on the field and the aims of the research. It often aims to connect the text to a broader social, political, cultural, or artistic context. Relatedly, it's good to be careful of confirmation bias when conducting these sorts of analyses, grounding your observations in clear and plausible ways.

What is a text?

The term "text" is broader than it seems. A text can be a piece of writing, such as a book, an email, or a transcribed conversation. But in this context, a text can also be any object whose meaning and significance you want to interpret in depth: a film, an image, an artifact, even a place.

The methods you use to analyze a text will vary according to the type of object and the purpose of your analysis:

- Analysis of a short story might focus on the imagery, narrative perspective and structure of the text.
- To analyze a film, not only the dialogue but also the cinematography and use of sound could be relevant to the analysis.
- A building might be analyzed in terms of its architectural features and how it is navigated by visitors.
- You could analyze the rules of a game and what kind of behaviour they are designed to encourage in players.

While textual analysis is most commonly applied to written language, bear in mind how broad the term "text" is and how varied the methods involved can be.

Textual analysis in cultural and media studies

In the fields of cultural studies and media studies, textual analysis is a key component of research. Researchers in these fields take media and cultural objects — for example, music videos, social media content, billboard advertising — and treat them as texts to be analyzed.

Usually working within a particular theoretical framework (for example, using postcolonial theory, media theory, or semiotics), researchers seek to connect elements of their texts with issues in contemporary politics and culture. They might analyze many different aspects of the text:

- Word choice
- Design elements

- Location of the text

- Target audience

- Relationship with other texts
