① INTRODUCTION

2007 Vocabulary of the Year

Patricia was born in Queens, New York City to Colombian immigrants parents. Patricia's first mother is a musician singer. She earned a degree in Illustration from the New School of Design, and after traveling in Europe, returned to New York City. Her first children's book with illustrations published in The Village Voice and The New York Times Book Review. Eventually, Patricia became an art director for book publishing houses, and has designed covers for authors such as Barbara Kingsolver and Sue Grafton. She also illustrated some of her own children's books and designed a baby line during this time. However, it is mostly based on an impression that Patricia had while not with her first young son. There was a young girl with a characterful personality similar to August's, and Patricia's own boy reached poverty. This inspired Patricia to explore what life might be like for a child like this young girl. Patricia has written many books about the characters from August for readers of all ages, and also began the Chesnut Finch Imagination, which centers primarily to pre-adolescent or pre-teens. Patricia lives in Brooklyn with her husband, three sons, and two dogs.

August has a condition known as Brachioradial syndrome, which affects the development of bones and other bone tissues. It's rare for children to be born with it, and in about 80% of cases, there's no family history or known cause. Despite the physical difference, and the associated health risks, August's peers have no complications. She's forming life-long friendships, TECI (Team Effect) intelligence is off the charts after life expectancy. Prior to the implementation of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), which was initially passed under a different name in 1973, most students like August were often unable to receive public education. IDEA required that public schools serve all students and created protocols for attending to the needs of differently-abled children in a general education setting. Today, many public schools still do not consider themselves Resilient Inclusion advocates. Differently-abled students often spend time in specialized education classrooms, and there's often a stigma to it, as children feel inclusion marginalizes them, or associate schools designed and built for students with differently-abled and "special needs" kids with them. This attitude is what August's mom refers to when she says that Brachier Program is an inclusion school.

PLATINUM ART WORKS

Broder makes a number of references to other works of literature throughout, both in the story itself and in some of the promotional materials. August describes Jeff Kinney's Dash and Dash (2010) in several passages, while the opening that follows (from Tom Watson's One and Twenty) is a reference to Matthew Arnold's Education at Large (1867), in which the author's English education, and John's narration, begin with a quote from Aristotle via Saint Augustine's The City of God. Other books that share thematic similarities with Broder's story of growing up include Fault in Our Stars by John Green, Matilda by Roald Dahl, Dragon's Lair by Philip José Farmer, and James Patterson's Jumpman.
