Workforce Readiness Competencies And Assessment:

Workforce Readiness Harold F. O'Neil, Jr., Harold F. O'Neil, 2014-03-05 Current economic difficulties and the challenge of competing in the world market have necessitated a rethinking of American approaches to the utilization of people in organizations Management now recognizes a need to have workers take on more responsibility at the points of production of sale and of service rendered if the United States is to compete in rapidly changing world markets This development means that much more is expected of even entry level members of the American workforce Thus even more is expected of our high schools and colleges to provide this type of workforce The need of American management for workers with greater skills and who can take on greater responsibility has spawned many commissions task forces and studies All of them have contributed to the vast evidence documenting the need for a more highly skilled workforce These studies are summarized and synthesized in this book However what remains largely undone is the development of methods to assess the necessary skills that have been identified A major portion of this book deals with assessment issues Workforce Readiness Competencies and Assessment explores the state of the art in the specification of competencies skills and their assessment for students entering the world of work from both high school and college Both individual and team competencies are examined via data that has been reported and collected in various settings schools laboratories and industrial facilities

An Assessment of the Workplace Readiness Skills Desired by Industries and Perceived by College Personnel in Alabama Jason Brett Hurst, 2008 Postsecondary graduates often do not have the skills needed for entry level employment in today s workforce Postsecondary students should have a curriculum that is relevant to today s workforce needs to increase the graduates marketability and success in our global economy This study examined the workplace readiness skills desired by the high tech industries in Alabama compared to the perceived importance of those skills from educators in Alabama s Two Year College System and the integration of those skills in the curricula It was believed that there was no significant difference in the perceptions of educators and industry supervisors in reference to their perceptions of workplace skills and integrating those skills into the curricula A web based survey was sent to a select group of high tech industry supervisors and educators from technical programs in Alabama The findings indicate that high tech firms are looking for people who have basic workplace skills and competencies that include but are not limited to the following honesty and integrity service to customers responsibility ability to work in teams listening skills and the ability to solve problems There was general agreement among the educators and supervisors on the importance of 22 of the 36 workplace readiness skills However for 14 of the workplace readiness skills there was sufficient evidence to reject the null hypothesis Industry supervisors indicated that a worker having the following workplace skills were not as important to their operation as the educator group thought they were 1 selecting materials and facilities usage 2 acquiring and evaluating information 3 organizing and maintaining information 4 understanding systems 5 selecting technology 6 maintaining and troubleshooting equipment 7 reads well 8 making good decisions 9 seeing things in the mind's eye 10 knows how to learn 11 knows how to reason 12 applies technology to tasks 13 does simple arithmetic and 14 has self-esteem Future research is needed to determine whether the findings in this study can be replicated The researcher recommends expanding the research to include more participants in the study
