Students benefit greatly by becoming used to the immediate stage that comes with it. The scaffolding that you, as a facilitator, can provide may help them feel more confident, but it is, particularly crucial, that the way in which you ask each other to think is designed to encourage them to think out loud in a structured, yet not adversarial, way. I encourage you to think of students as being "stuck" in their thinking. The only way to get unstuck is to ask them to explain what they are thinking. It is not a subtle suggestion, but it is a direct suggestion. I encourage you to think of this as a direct suggestion. I encourage you to think of this as a direct suggestion. I encourage you to think of this as a direct suggestion.
