

The Quickest Claw in the Ocean and the World's Fastest Animals

If you had to make a list of the fastest and loudest things in the world, you're probably going to start thinking of big, noisy things. How about? Space rockets?

Would a tiny little shrimp make your list? People it should.

Scientists recently discovered that penaeid shrimps snapping shrimp have some of the loudest sounds of any animal on the planet.

The young shrimp can snap their little claws with an acceleration similar to the speed of a bullet leaving a gun! Impressive for an animal that's only about the size of a sugar.

Snapping shrimp have one claw longer than the other. The big claw snaps shut so fast that it creates a tiny jet of water.

Snapping shrimp claw

That's just a little bit quicker than the fastest animal on land, the cheetah. Cheetahs have been measured travelling at 60.9 mph.

Both of these rapid animals can move at quite a bit, but they'll lose every time in a race with the fastest shrimps animal.

The peregrine falcon is the fastest thing in the animal kingdom. They can reach top speeds of around 200 mph when diving through the air.

According to Guinness World

Records, in 1999, a peregrine falcon named 'Frightful' was released from a plane and reached 242 mph as it dived through the air.

Now, that's fast!

Glossary

penaeid	Young, not an adult yet
acceleration	How quickly an object moves to a higher speed
cheetah	A land mammal, the third fastest peregrine	A bird of prey, the fastest

- The noise created when a snapping shrimp snaps its claw is one of the loudest sounds on Earth.
- It can reach roughly 200 mph which makes them one of the fastest animals on the planet.

The jet of water is used as the shrimp's prey. It travels so fast that a bubble is created behind it. The bubble pops with a loud crack and releases a shockwave that can knock its opponent out.

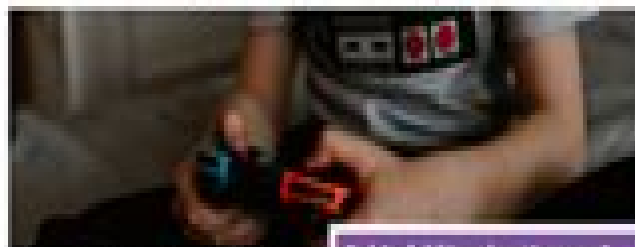

The way they live and live is why they're also known as pistol shrimp.

Their claws may have extreme acceleration but that's not the same as top speed. So, what are the fastest animals in water, on land or in air?

In our oceans, the sailfish holds the speed record. With a streamline large and sleek body shape, these fish have been clocked travelling at 68 mph.

Is Gaming Bad for Young Children?

Do lots of children play video games?

Despite what many parents might think, playing video games for hours every day may not be bad for young children's brains.

A team of researchers from the University of Houston, US, looked for links between the gaming habits and cognitive abilities of 1st primary school aged children.

As they worked on the research, the team "Our studies turned up no such links, regardless of how long the children played and what types of games they chose."

On average, the children played video games for 1.5 hours a day. Some of the children were played for as much as 4.5 hours every day.

The team looked for connections between the children's gaming time and their results on a cognitive ability test.

May, Jabele worked on the study. He said that the results showed "no direct linkage between video game playing and cognitive performance."

If you enjoy gaming, then that might sound like good news. However, the results look messy.

The findings suggest that video games brought to brain development. However, that doesn't mean they help it either.

In fact, the team found that some games

- According to a recent report from an organization called Ofcom, in the UK around 55% of children aged 5-17 play games on some type of device.
- That includes playing on a games console, tablet, smartphone, PC, smart TV, smart watch or a TV handset.

helping the brain development of young adults "don't have the same impact in much younger children."

The team also warned that playing video games takes time away from other activities, such as homework.

"Reasonable amounts of video gaming should be OK, which will be helpful even for the kids," said Jabele.
