My Mourning Routine

When my mother passed away, I was 18. I remember feeling a sense of loss and grief that I had never experienced before. I was alone in the world, and I felt like I had lost a part of myself. I was in a state of shock, and I didn't know what to do. I was alone in the world, and I felt like I had lost a part of myself. I was in a state of shock, and I didn't know what to do.

I started by taking care of myself. I went to the gym every day, and I ate healthy food. I also started journaling, and I wrote down my thoughts and feelings. I found that this helped me to process my emotions, and I was able to start feeling better. I also started volunteering at a local hospital, and I found that this helped me to feel like I was making a difference in the world.

The hardest part of mourning was accepting the fact that my mother was gone. I had to learn to live without her, and I had to learn to love myself again. I found that this was a process, and it took time. I had to learn to live without her, and I had to learn to love myself again. I found that this was a process, and it took time.

These small, everyday steps made a difference in my life. I was able to move forward, and I was able to start living again. I was able to move forward, and I was able to start living again.
