

The translator is an important player in the process of cross-cultural communication. The position of the translator gives him the authority to reproduce the source text in a new language and in a new culture. The present study investigates this authority of the translator, how it is employed in translation and, henceforth, the possibility of the translator to be a writer of the text that he produces, i.e. the target text. Furthermore, the study deals with the problems of determining the role that the translator plays in translation, the kind of relation that relates the translator to the writer of the source text and how they affect each other.

Telling the Story of Translation Judith Woodsworth, 2017

The Writer William Henry Hills, Robert Luce, 1899 Translation Translation, 2021-07-26 Translation Translation contributes to current debate on the question of translation dealt with in an interdisciplinary perspective with implications not only of a theoretical order but also of the didactic and the practical orders In the context of globalization the question of translation is fundamental for education and responds to new community needs with reference to Europe and more extensively to the international world In its most obvious sense translation concerns verbal texts and their relations among different languages However to remain within the sphere of verbal signs languages consist of a plurality of different languages that also relate to each other through translation processes Moreover translation occurs between verbal languages and nonverbal languages and among nonverbal languages without necessarily involving verbal languages Thus far the allusion is to translation processes within the sphere of anthroposemiosis But translation occurs among signs and the signs implicated are those of the semiotic sphere in its totality which are not exclusively signs of the linguistic verbal order Beyond anthroposemiosis translation is a fact of life and invests the entire biosphere or biosemiosphere as clearly evidenced by research in biosemiotics for where there is life there are signs and where there are signs or semiotic processes there is translation indeed semiotic processes are translation processes According to this approach reflection on translation obviously cannot be restricted to the domain of linguistics but must necessarily involve semiotics the general science or theory of signs In this theoretical framework essays have been included not only from major translation experts but also from researchers working in different areas in addition to semiotics and linguistics also philosophy literary criticism cultural studies gender studies biology and the medical sciences All scholars work on problems of translation in the light of their own special competencies and interests The Writer ,1911 The Translator ,2002 The Writer's Digest ,1921
