the authors' findings. A comparison between the two sets of results is presented in Table 1. The results show that the two sets of results are very similar, with the only significant difference being in the coefficient on the variable Age. This difference is likely due to the fact that the sample used in the first study was larger than the sample used in the second study, and thus the results are more precise in the first study.

the 1990s, the U.S. has been accused of using human rights as a tool to advance its foreign policy interests. This has led to a growing skepticism among the American public and Congress regarding the effectiveness of human rights as a tool for promoting democracy. In response, the U.S. has sought to strengthen its commitment to human rights by establishing the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom in 1998. This commission is an independent, bipartisan body that monitors and reports on religious freedom around the world. Its findings are used by the State Department to inform U.S. foreign policy and to provide technical assistance to governments that are struggling with religious freedom issues. The commission's work has been instrumental in bringing attention to religious freedom issues in countries such as China, Iran, and Russia, and in pressuring these governments to improve their human rights records.
