

Making Connections

A good reader uses their prior knowledge and experiences to connect with a text.

These connections help readers to build a stronger, deeper understanding of a text.

There are three main types of connections a reader can make with a text and:

Text to text

Text to self

Text to world

Text to Self Connections

Text to self connections are links a reader can make between the text they are reading and their own life experiences. These connections might include something you have seen or done before, something you have felt or something you plan on doing in the future.

Some questions you could ask yourself to help make text to self connections include:

- What does this story remind me of in my life?
- How are my experiences like the ones in the characters in the story?
- How is this story like ones I've read before?

Here are some useful sentence starters to help you:

- This story reminds me of...
- I can relate to the character because...
- When this character... it was just like when I...
