My Mourning Routine

When my mother died, I had a "Mourning Routine" which consisted of mourning clothes, death candles lit on my knees, and the prayer: "Oh Father, be comfort to those that are dying, because they need thee more than I do."

I usually wore continuous mourning, as practice had made the habit on my ordinary work and pleasure. For the day I had a special robe with my ornamental buttons and the usual preparation to go to sitting and to mourning.

The routine also included wearing a bag of coffee beans during meals to quell taste, coffee instead of tea, and abstaining from anything considered food, making use of medicinal broths, fasting, practicing a structured craft for the day.

These small mourning rules made a habit of mourning and continued to my day.
