Dahl,2025-08-19 Equip Strengthening smallholder livestock

systems for the future a project that is at the feed the future innovation lab for livestock systems aims to improve livestock productivity by improving the supply of quality feed to dairy cows in Ethiopia and sheep and goats in Burkina Faso This is achieved through interconnected activities that involve inventory of feed resources using landscape analysis testing improving yield quality and preservation of forages determining and meeting nutrient requirement of local dairy and sheep and goat breeds improving the capacity to analyze nutritional value of livestock feed using NIRS ILRI and examining Effects of Synergizing Feed Management and Genetic Interventions on Milk Production and Health of Dairy Cows Project activities have been implemented since 2018 and most of the components have generated data or evidence that has mostly been analyzed and is now ready for publication In 2019 studies that mostly focus on forages have been published in special issue at the Agronomy journal The are other studies that have results but not yet published These include include agronomic testing of improved forages mainly from Ethiopia the use of improved forage or preserved forage to improve animal productivity estimating and testing nutrient requirement of local animal breeds The purpose of this proposed special issue is to share the results of the EQUIP FEED project with a wider academic research and development community and stakeholders that focus on improvement of animal productivity in developing countries

Impact of the Crises on the Efficiency of the Financial Market: Evidence from the SDM Bachar Fakhry, 2018-07-15 The efficient market hypothesis has been around since 1962 the theory based on a simple rule that states the price of any asset must fully reflect all available information Yet there is empirical evidence suggesting that markets are too volatile to be efficient In essence this evidence seems to suggest that the reaction of the market participants to the information or events that is the crucial factor rather than the actual information This highlights the need to include the behavioural finance theory in the pricing of assets Essentially the research aims to analyse the efficiency of six key sovereign debt markets during a period of changing volatility including the recent global financial and sovereign debt crises We analyse the markets in the pre crisis period and during the financial and sovereign debt crises to determine the impact of the crises on the efficiency of these financial markets We use two GARCH based variance bound tests to test the null hypothesis of the market being too volatile to be efficient Proposing a GJR GARCH variant of the variance bound test to account for variation in the asymmetrical effect This leads to an analysis of the changing behaviour of price volatility to identify what makes the market efficient or inefficient In general our EMH tests resulted in mixed results hinting at the acceptance of the null hypothesis of the market being too volatile to be efficient However interestingly a number of 2017 observations under both models seem to be hinting at the rejection of the null hypothesis Furthermore our proposed GJR GARCH variant of the variance bound test seems to be more likely to accept the EMH than the GARCH variant of the test
