My Mourning Routine

When my mother died, I had a "Mourning Routine" that consisted of mourning clothes, death candles lit on the day, meals that my family ate (which is usually just my daily routine), my mother's old car (which is usually just my daily routine), and my mother's old house (which is usually just my daily routine).

I usually wear mourning clothes, I usually eat meals that my mother ate, I usually drive my mother's car, and I usually live in my mother's house. I usually do this for a year, and then I usually stop.

The routine that I usually do is to wear mourning clothes, to eat meals that my mother ate, to drive my mother's car, and to live in my mother's house. I usually do this for a year, and then I usually stop.

These small mourning rituals create a tradition of mourning and comfort in my life.
