- In a positive correlation, when one variable increases, the other variable also tends to increase. For example, the more hours a person studies, the higher their test scores tend to be.
- In a negative correlation, when one variable increases, the other variable tends to decrease. For example, the more hours a person spends watching television, the lower their test scores tend to be.
- Correlation does not imply causation. Just because two variables are correlated does not mean that one variable causes the other. For example, ice cream sales and drowning deaths are positively correlated, but one does not cause the other. Both are influenced by a third variable, temperature.
- The strength of a correlation is measured by the correlation coefficient, which ranges from -1 to 1. A value of 1 indicates a perfect positive correlation, -1 indicates a perfect negative correlation, and 0 indicates no correlation.
- One way to visualize correlation is through a scatter plot, where each point represents an individual observation. The slope of the line of best fit indicates the direction and strength of the correlation.
- Regression analysis is a statistical method used to model the relationship between a dependent variable and one or more independent variables. It allows us to predict the value of the dependent variable based on the values of the independent variables.
- Regression analysis can be used to identify trends and make predictions. For example, a company might use regression analysis to predict future sales based on historical data.
