Mindful Morning Routine

Wineful Morning Routine

My Mourning Routine

Living with chronic illness and/or neurodegeneration, having something as seemingly routine as death on the agenda for the week means that death is not distant or abstract but will only, ultimately, be faced head-on and coping will begin.

It is during these quiet, quiet moments, planning to prepare that helps the focus on the abilities and not disabilities for the day. Even a special thing such as my chocolate cappuccino will help provide perspective to death, ending it and leaving it.

The routine that develops, involving a mix of coffee and wine during the day in quiet hours, when death is not threatened, the time, beginning somewhat close to the end of previous August, has been comforting and somewhat of a relief.

These small, everyday steps create a foundation of safety and comfort in my life.
