

A HISTORY OF THE TYPEWRITER

BY SCRIBENDI.COM

Curious about the history of the typewriter? Although the first writing machines were built in the 14th century, they varied in size and shape; some were as large as pianos! The first typewriter was patented in England in 1714, but typewriters as we know them didn't actually kick off as manufactured products until 1870.

DID YOU KNOW

Mark Twain purchased a Remington and was the first to submit a typewritten manuscript.

20TH CENTURY

Since the first Remington only allowed capital letters, work was still needed. By 1901, John Underwood was making a typewriter with a tab, backspace, and ribbon selector.

In 1902, George Blickensderfer created the first electric typewriter, which was impractical until 1925. In 1961, International Business Machines manufactured an electric typewriter.

In 1984, the Selectric II by International Business Machines debuted, but by the early 1990s, they stopped making electric models. Personal computers began to gain popularity.

DID YOU KNOW

Thanks to enthusiasts and collectors (hello!), typewriters have a respectable future as memorabilia.

19TH CENTURY

We can credit the creation of the typewriter to Malling Hansen, who used a sphere with keys to create the Hansen Writing Ball.

However, the beautiful machine you probably picture when you think "typewriter" is credited to Christopher L. Sholes and Carlos Glidden, who developed a machine with a keyboard.

The rights were bought by E. Remington & Sons, who began production in 1874. They developed the well-known QWERTY keyboard to avoid jamming, and it has been used ever since (even on your iPhone!)

DID YOU KNOW

Typewriters refer not only to machines but also to typists, who were commonly women. By 1910, 81% of professional typists were female.

21ST CENTURY

By the late '90s and forward to the next century, most office typewriters in the United States were provided by only three firms.

Sadly, typewriters will play a minor role in the future due to the popularity of computers. However, some businesses still use typewriters, as they are sometimes more convenient for small tasks.

Interestingly, the typewriter has a future in developing countries, with manufacturers supplying the market worldwide.
