

The Memory of Water¹

by Shelagh Stephenson²

Premiered at Hampstead Theatre, London; July, 1996.³

Act One⁴

Blackness. A pool of bluish green light⁵ reveals Vi⁶, aged around forty. She is sitting at a dressing-table. The drawer is open. She wears a green taffeta cocktail frock circa 1962.⁷ She is sexy, immaculately made up, her hair perfectly coiffed. She wears earrings and a matching necklace, and carries a clutch bag, from which she takes a cigarette and lighter.⁸ She lights up. The pool of light opens up to reveal the rest of the room in a dim, golden, unreal glow: a bedroom, dominated by a double bed in which Mary lies, wearing a pair of sunglasses. She watches Vi. The room is slightly old fashioned, with dressing-table and matching wardrobe. Some clothes are draped over a chair. There is a long diagonal crack running across the wall behind the bed. An open suitcase lies on the floor, half unpacked, a half-full bottle of whisky and a pile of books on the bedside table.

Mary What do you want?

Vi Someone's been going through these drawers.⁹

Mary Not me.

Vi What did you think you'd find?

Mary Nothing.

She closes the drawer and looks over to the bed.

Vi That crack's getting worse. Have you noticed anything about the view?

Mary No.

1. The title of the play. It refers to a concept of homeopathy wherein water is able to preserve memories by absorbing particles of them. This informs the reader/audience that the play will heavily involve memories.
 2. The author Shelagh Stephenson. The Memory of Water is her first play. Her plays frequently deal with new advances in science. She wrote the play shortly after the death of her own mother and was influenced by this event as well as her own sisters, although she claims that it is not biographical.
 3. Where the play was first performed and the date of its first performance.
 4. This tells us that the play has more than one act; however it does not mention scenes, which could either mean that the play is short or that it has no set changes. In this case it is the latter. The first act will presumably focus on introducing the characters.
 5. The Blue-Green lighting represents the association of the memory. It is a visual titular reference.
 6. Character's name in bold.
 7. This is a description of the character, it tells us that Mary remembers her mother as she was in the 1960s. She remembers her as concerned with her appearance as she is sitting at a dressing table.
 8. Mary remembers her mother as being attractive and always being made up. This could lead the audience to think that Vi is a vain character.
 9. Mary remembers her mother's smoking habit.
 10. Vi indirectly accuses Mary by posing a question.
