

The Digestive System

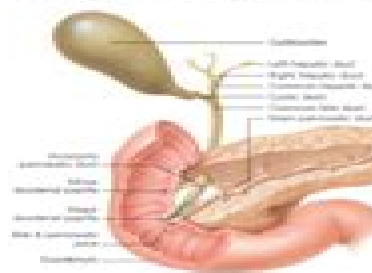

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth, is digested through a series of chemical reactions, and is absorbed into the bloodstream. The waste is then eliminated from the body through the excretory system.

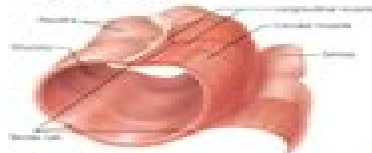

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, chyme moves into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the liver and pancreatic juice secreted by the pancreas. This acts as a strong agent on the chyme, while the duodenum's mucous membrane secretes digestive enzymes further. Bile, from the liver, emulsifies fat, breaking it into small droplets in the gallbladder.

Layers of large intestine

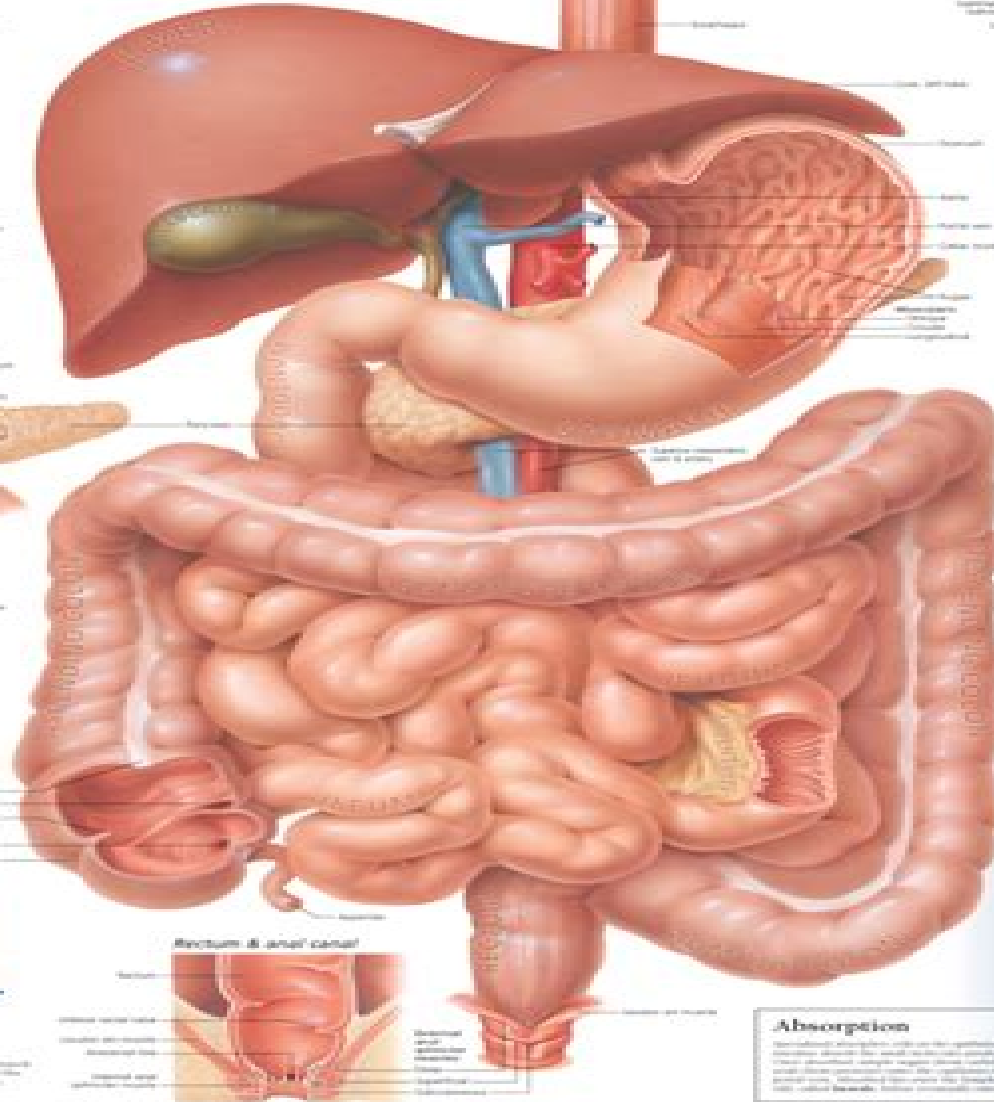

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the caecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the chyme, and for eliminating the waste from the body.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is then, when the stomach has relaxed.

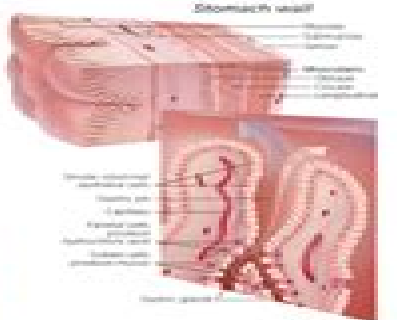

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. Saliva, the liquid secreted by the salivary glands, is mixed with the food in the mouth. The salivary glands, the parotid, sublingual, and submandibular glands, secrete saliva into the mouth. Saliva contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of starches. It also contains mucus, which lubricates the food, and lysozyme, which kills bacteria.

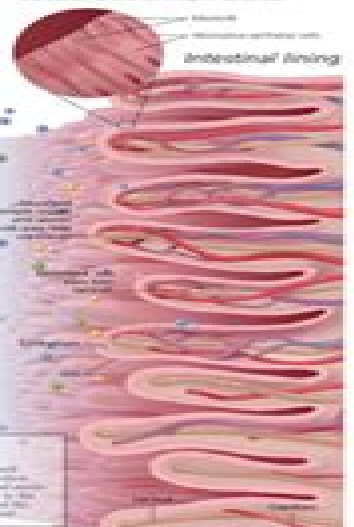

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for digesting food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardia, the entrance to the stomach, and the pylorus, the exit to the small intestine. The stomach wall is composed of several layers of muscle, which contract to mix the food with gastric juice, a mixture of hydrochloric acid and digestive enzymes.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine, where it receives chyme from the stomach. The jejunum is the middle part, and the ileum is the last part, which empties into the large intestine. The small intestine is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients.

Intestinal lining

Absorption

The process of absorption is the transfer of nutrients from the small intestine into the bloodstream. This process occurs in the villi, which are finger-like projections that increase the surface area for absorption. The villi are covered with a thin layer of cells called the epithelium, which allows nutrients to pass through into the blood.
