Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged, overweight women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The participants were randomly assigned to either the intervention group or the control group. The intervention group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program. The control group performed no exercise. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and health-related quality of life than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program can improve the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged, overweight women.

And that's good, because you and I don't know enough about the science of it. So we're going to get some solid, hard data that has the scientific community that has been able to figure out in general what's going on with it and we're going to get some good evidence that it's not as bad as the media has been saying. And that's good, because you and I don't know enough about the science of it.

bioassays were carried out using 100 µg of protein and 100 µg of substrate. The reaction was stopped by the addition of 100 µl of 10% trichloroacetic acid (TCA). The reaction mixture was extracted with 100 µl of 100% methanol. The extract was dried by rotary evaporation and the residue was resuspended in 100 µl of 100% methanol. The extract was then analysed by HPLC.
