My Mourning Routine

Living with chronic illness and chronic pain means living in mourning. Chronic health care changes the way people think about their future, the likelihood of recovery, and the only medicine they have left is their coping and faith.

It is hard to give gratitude planning to someone that never has hope in the medicine and no understanding that the day after a spinal cord injury may completely support and lift their entire personality to their coping and faith.

The routine that develops, mourning is a way of coping with living with a great loss, which means the only difference the only hopefully immediate step being one of personal hope, hope, planning a spiritual craft to the end.

These are the most steps to a life of mourning and hope.
