2. So Good Sushi is owned by Megumi. Megumi makes sushi to sell to local cafés and supermarkets. All her sales are on credit. She finds that on average 50% of her customers pay in the month of sale because they receive a 5% discount; 45% pay in the month following sale; and 3% pay in the second month after sale. The final 2% are written off as bad debts in the third month after sale.

Sales for October, November and December were $52 000, $55 000 and $60 000 respectively.

Expected sales are: January $70 000, February $65 000, March $62 000. (Hint: You will not need the October sales for calculating cash received from customers but you will need the October sales to calculate bad debts written off in January.)

Megumi pays her suppliers in the month of purchase in order to take advantage of the 8% prompt payment discount. Her purchases are expected to be: January $22 200, February $20 800 and March $19 000.

General expenses are $6 000 per month. This includes bad debts and depreciation on equipment, of $900 per month.

Wages are $12 000 for January, $10 000 for February and $10 000 for March. Eighty per cent of the wages are paid in the month the cost of the wages is incurred and the remaining 20% is PAYE, which is paid the following month. December wages were $11 000.

There is a quarterly rates account due in February, of $1 260.

So Good Sushi has a term deposit of $10 000 that is due to mature in March. Interest to be received is 5% p.a. The term deposit has been invested for 6 months.

So Good Sushi has a revolving credit facility, which is like a giant overdraft. The account currently has a balance of $80 000 overdrawn. Megumi was hoping to have the balance paid off by the end of the summer because winter months are her quieter months. Interest for the facility is 6% p.a., payable monthly based on the closing balance of the facility at the end of the previous month.
