

A Guide to Successful

Potty Training

How to start

Beginning to potty train your child can, for some parents, be an anxious or difficult time. With realistic expectations at the outset, plenty of time and lots of patience, you can make the journey out of nappies easier for both of you.

Remember that children vary enormously as to when they are considered 'ready' for potty training. Well-meaning relatives and friends may all offer conflicting advice and opinions; let your child's behaviour be the lead.

Children need to be able to control their bowel and bladder movements, have a desire to be clean and dry and ideally be able to tell you that they need to use the potty. Some children may be dry during the day at two years old, although this is quite early. By three years old, many children will be dry most days, although accidents will still happen. By four, the majority of children will be dry. Becoming dry overnight takes longer but will happen anywhere between three and five years.

If your child has a bowel movement at a regular time of day, such as just before bath time, have a potty around and take their nappy off, suggesting that they sit on it. If they don't want to, this is fine; just try another time.

If your child is giving you some warning that they are about to 'wee', you should encourage them to use the potty. Praise them if they are successful but if they are not, just clean up and change their clothing as needed without fuss. This process can be quite lengthy for some children while others soon understand and are quite delighted about their achievements.

It is usually best to start toilet training when the following begin to occur:

- When they begin to tell you that they have done a wee or poo, OR that they are about to 'go'
- When they have long periods of time where their nappy is dry.
