lessons learned in its construction and operation to the problems of society in general Machiavelli follows his lead in linking military and civil societies He goes a step beyond Xenophon when he applies the lessons of military practice to the internal affairs of his civic body For all his recognition of the failings of human nature Xenophon could not free himself from the Greek distinction between friend and foe For him coercion was to be applied to the enemy and both the army and the polis were to be based on friendship Machiavelli does not recognize this distinction To him everyone is a potential enemy hence the civic rulers must employ the same measures employed by the general to defeat his enemies This is the reason Machiavelli makes no distinction between the statesman and military commander and why his approach to politics is a military one Just as the unchanging character of human nature is the stable ingredient which makes the study of history important for the statesman the presence of man himself at the controls in all human organizations makes the study of his character the basic activity for the successful leader Machiavelli's state and army are not abstract entities endowed with human characteristics or desires All decisions are made by men and all evoke reactions in other men Machiavelli's insistence on this principle is seen in each of the diverse topics included in this study For him the proper decision to such questions as whether to form alliances or not when to invade the enemy territory when to use money how to acquire and control colonies how to use peace offensives how to organize a community and whether to appease an aggressor or not are all based on an evaluation of the probable reaction of those humans affected by the decision Likewise his criteria for the selection of a leader and his precepts to guide the leader's actions in command of an army are based on principles of psychology The reaction of the army is itself governed by an evaluation of the human material available to the leader Such considerations as the proper type of soldier the discipline to be developed the training program to be followed the most useful armament the correct logistical procedures and the proper role of infantry cavalry and artillery are all made under the assumption that man has been is and always will be the central and essential weapon in war Based on this assumption some of Machiavelli's major points are as follows 1 War between men is inherent and inevitable 2 War will be total or limited depending on the political objectives involved 3 Uncontrolled and unprepared for war is destructive but properly channeled and prepared for it can serve socially useful purposes 4 The proper way to conduct a war is to carry it to the enemy keep the initiative maintain exclusive decision making power do not try to buy friends do not remain neutral or passive when danger threatens however remotely always present your side as peace loving and leave your opponent every opportunity to retreat or surrender use subversive agents inside the other society to pave the way govern acquired territories through local intermediaries do not risk total victory or defeat with less than all your forces be prepared to adapt to the times to retreat if necessary to await another day 5 Leadership is a creative activity It is the highest aspiration of man It is the essential element in victory The leader can      The Art of War

The Art of War (Annotated): by Sun Tzu Sun Tzu, 2021-04-15 The famous military treatise The Art of War written by Sun Tzu depicts a philosophy of war for managing conflicts and winning battles Some modern philosophers believe that apart from the writings of the author it also contains commentary and clarifications from later military philosophers such as Li Quan and Du Mu This masterpiece since its first publication has been translated and distributed internationally and was frequently referred and used by generals and theorists There are numerous theories concerned with the completion of the text but it has been archeological proved that the Art of War was composed by at least the early Han dynasty Since it is nearly impossible to predict the correct date of its completion the differing theories regarding the work's author's and date of completion will never resolve It was one of the six survived major works written before the unification of China in the 2nd century BC In the late 1st millennium AD during the Song Dynasty these six major works were combined with a Tang Dynasty text into a collection also known as the Seven Military Classics Being the central part of the collection The Art of War formed the bases of orthodox military theory in China The language used in the book can be distinguishable from a Western text on warfare and strategy It was said that the text had recurrent mentions such as a leader must be serene and inscrutable and capable of comprehending unfathomable plans which was confusing for Western readers who lack the awareness of the East Asian context These statements will make clear sense if studied with Taoist thought and practice According to Sun Tzu an ideal general was an enlightened Taoist master which led to The Art of War to become a prime example of Taoist strategy It is different from the other Western works such as Prussian general Carl von Clausewitz's On War on its spiritual dimension To have well understanding of this text it is essential to have awareness on Taoism This book also gained popularity among the political leaders and those in business management Today it is also used in public administration and planning Apart from describing the theories of battles this text also discusses the diplomacy and developing relationships with other nation's importance for the sovereignty of a state It is now listed on the Marine Corps Professional Reading Program and is recommended to be read by all United States Military Intelligence personnel CIA officers are also required to read this book Scholars discovered a collection of ancient texts written on unusually well preserved bamboo slips in early 1970s These texts included The Art of War and Sun Bin's Military Methods Sun Bin's Military Methods was written by a descendant of Sun and was lost since then It is considered very important because of Sun Bin's relationship to Sun Tzu and also due to its addition to the body of military thought in late Chinese antiquity This discovery led to the significant expansion of the body of surviving Warring States military theory Sun Bin's text apart from being the only surviving military text from the Warring States period discovered in the twentieth century also contains the closest similarity to The Art of War among all surviving texts The
