For the 1874-1885 years the two and three year old fishlings and yearlings among the greater number of the fish were the most abundant of each year. The greater proportion of yearlings and yearlings of the three year old were the smallest specimens and were occupying the bottom of the stream, feeding upon the dead and decaying leaves and twigs and upon any other plant and plant fragments and the greater number were common to both the older and older yearlings fishes and could not be distinguished from one another.
