Business and trade go hand-in-hand. Thus, the development of a market-oriented economy and the introduction of a market-based currency are two important prerequisites for sustainable development. Implementing an alternative currency, if conducted properly, can bring significant economic and social benefits, and thus enhance sustainable development and environmental protection.

the "new economy" and whether it is sustainable. The new economy has been described as the "information economy" or the "knowledge economy" and generally refers to the way in which information and knowledge are used to produce goods and services. The new economy is often characterized by high technology, rapid innovation, and global markets. It is also associated with the growth of the service sector and the decline of manufacturing. The new economy has been seen as a source of economic growth and job creation, but it has also been criticized for creating income inequality and exacerbating environmental problems. The new economy has also been seen as a threat to traditional industries and jobs, particularly in the manufacturing sector.

– among other things, because, even in practice, it is not clear what is happening with the money as there may be a lot of money and a lot of time between the initial deposit and the final withdrawal.
