care costs and higher expectations for older age have led to international interest in how to promote a healthier old age and how to age successfully Changing patterns of illness in old age with morbidity being compressed into fewer years and effective interventions to reduce disability and health risks in later life make the goal of aging successfully more realistic Most health care provided in the developed world goes to those aged 65 years or above The medical model is so dominant that few health professionals are aware of psychosocial aging The result focuses on the burden of old age the decline and the body's failure This negative perspective inevitably dominates consultations between doctors and patients However there is ample evidence that many elderly people regard themselves as happy and well even in the presence of disease or disability
