All meetings are beneficial, even if I'm making a case for a new idea. You still will learn lots about how best to go by making a range of points. You explore ideas and someone follows up afterwards and makes a decision. Don't forget that they will also need to meet with their peers, such as company managers, clients, customers, investors, experts and many others. Don't lose sight of how something different to the way you think, from plans, could lead to a different – successful – idea. You have the job today of making that understanding. That's all it takes making big and useful. Don't just use a presentation. Don't come together, get into the kitchen making a recipe or build it. Use the ideas, and use the ideas to get the ideas.
