

Virus, 'flu' trigger nursing home precautions

Health officials in several states have issued guidelines for nursing homes to take precautions against the spread of the new coronavirus and influenza virus. The guidelines are part of a broader effort to prevent the spread of these viruses in long-term care facilities.

The guidelines include measures such as screening residents and staff for symptoms, isolating individuals who are ill, and implementing strict infection control protocols. Health officials emphasize the importance of these measures to protect vulnerable populations.

In addition to the guidelines, health officials are providing ongoing support and resources to nursing homes. This includes information on the latest research and best practices for managing outbreaks in these facilities.

The new coronavirus and influenza virus are both highly contagious and can cause severe illness, particularly in older adults and those with underlying health conditions. Therefore, it is crucial for nursing homes to take these precautions seriously.

Health officials will continue to monitor the situation and update guidelines as more information becomes available. The goal is to ensure the safety and well-being of all residents and staff in nursing homes.
