My Mourning Routine

When my mother died, I had a "Mourning Routine" which consisted of mourning clothes, death candles lit on my knees, and the prayer: "Oh Father, be merciful to those that are dying, because they need Your love more than I do."

I usually wore continuous mourning, as practice that kept me close to my mother while she was present. For the day before a burial, I wore only one continuous mourning cloth. This acted as a reminder to pray, eat, sleep, and be happy.

The routine also always included a bag of coffee beans being used to spread love, justice, mercy, and forgiveness. I always frequently mentioned how much love of spiritual healing I was placing in a structured cloth for my day.

These small mourning cloth rituals in preparation of mourning were continued in my life.
