Chapter 8 (The Business of Information Technology) - Pg 181 of PDF

What the IT organization does and does not do

Does NOT Do:

- The IT organization does not set business strategy
- Clear examples include core business functions, such as selling, manufacturing, and accounting, and few functional managers would attempt to delegate these tasks to IT professionals.
- IT professionals should not have the sole responsibility for deciding which business projects receive IT dollars. Giving carte blanche to the IT professional would mean that the IT organization decides what is important to the business units
- IT professionals should not solely decide the acceptable level of IT services or security. Because senior managers run the business, they are the ones who must decide on the level of service and security that should be delivered by the IT organization

It DOES Do:

- Participate in the discussions and partner with the business to ensure that IT can provide the infrastructure, applications, and support necessary for the successful implementation of the business strategy.
- The IT organization can also provide ideas of new business capabilities afforded by new technologies. In that sense, IT leaders must be part of key business strategy discussions.

Key roles in IT organizations

- CIO: As the most senior IT professional in the corporate hierarchy, must champion the IT organization by promoting IT as a strategic tool for growth and innovation.
- Business technology strategist: the strategic business leader who uses technology as the core tool in creating competitive advantage and aligning business and IT strategies
