S. White,2015-10-23 Originally published in 1986 This collection of essays is unified by one leading idea that the active and creative abilities of listeners and readers deserve as much attention as the skills of speakers and writers It is shown that hearers far from being passive recipients in the communicative process are in fact active in selecting interpreting and creating from the disparate signals they receive Equally readers are involved in creating individual patterns of significance from a text In presenting this argument some essays deal with the importance of gender considerations some with special modes of writing such as the private diary and literary translations and others with the more familiar fields of poetry and drama In the sphere of popular music distinctions such as folk and pop indicate special problems in assessing the authenticity of a listener s response By concentrating on active listening the collection develops and illustrates the conviction that there are fundamental premises underlying the various disciplines under review the analysis of which makes for a fuller understanding of communication in all its forms senses and in particular the sense of hearing were ultimately regarded as necessary indeed salvific constraints for fallen human beings By examining early catechesis preaching and prayer she demonstrates that what illiterate early Christians heard both formed their minds and souls and above all enabled them to become literate listeners able not only to grasp the rule of faith but also tacitly to follow the infinite variations on it which were played out in early Christian teaching exegesis and worship It becomes clear that listening to the faith was less a matter of rationally appropriating facts and more an art which needed to be constantly practiced for what was heard could not be definitively fixed and pinned down but was ultimately the Word of the unknowable transcendent God This word demanded of early Christian listeners a response to attend to its echoes recollect and represent it stretch out towards its source and in the process be transformed by it
