

“The author to her book”

“The Author to Her Book” by Anne Bradstreet is a poem in which the speaker addresses her own published book as if it were her child.

1. What is the poem about?

The poem explores the speaker's feelings towards her own work, which she likens to a child that was prematurely born and taken away before she could properly nurture and refine it. The speaker expresses a sense of inadequacy and frustration with the publication of her book, as it was released without her intended revisions.

2. Who is the speaker?

The speaker is Anne Bradstreet herself. In the poem, she adopts the persona of a mother addressing her book, using a metaphorical language to convey her complex emotions towards the published work.

3. Explain the use of metaphor in the poem.

The primary metaphor in the poem is the comparison of the speaker's book to a child. The book is described as an “ill-form'd offspring” and a “rambling brat.” This metaphor conveys the speaker's sense of dissatisfaction with her work, as if it were a child born prematurely and not yet ready to face the world. The metaphor creates a vivid image of the speaker's conflicted emotions and the perceived imperfections of her published book.

4. What does the poem reveal about Bradstreet the poet?

The poem reveals Anne Bradstreet's personal and emotional attachment to her writing. It suggests that she views her work as an extension of herself, and the flaws she perceives in her published book reflect a deep sense of personal disappointment. Bradstreet, one of the earliest American poets, grapples with the challenges of being a female writer in a time when such pursuits were not always encouraged. The poem offers a glimpse into the complexities of her relationship with her own creative output and the struggle for recognition.
