

Freedom and Disciplines

Freedom is often a misapplied and misunderstood concept. A good example as to when this was a misapplied and misunderstood concept would be around the 1970's Just at the end of the free love, hippy, and protesting era. Everyone had the attitude of "do whatever I want." With this attitude being the most influential they would be drawn to these Montessori classes with the expectation that their child would be "free". They became confused as they quickly found out this was not the case. The incorrect expectation or idea was it was pure freedom when it was the freedom of exploration and the freedom within boundaries. The true definition of Freedom is the capacity or ability to cause in the face of stimuli and make a choice to the exclusion of all other choices. To put it simply "stop and think before you act ". The child will stop and recognize what options are available to them. Just like a small child who can only do a few simple things will pause and think "I can only take things that I know how to do." Once they have made that choice and they know there are more options they understand to stick to the choice they have just made. Now that we have an idea of the background, and real meaning of freedom lets discuss what "freedom" meant from a Montessori point of view.

Freedom: capacity or ability to cause in the face of stimuli and make a choice to the exclusion of all other choices. To put it simply "stop and think before you act ". The child will stop and recognize what options are available to them. Just like a small child who can only do a few simple things will pause and think "I can only take things that I know how to do." Once they have made that choice and they know there are more options they understand to stick to the choice they have just made.

Freedom is the idea that the child has enough knowledge and experience in recognition to make a choice. With knowledge and experience they can recognize the choices and have made some choices while learning what choices feel right for them. Remember freedom is something the child experiences within themselves and not something that is given to them by to them by teachers or adults. Adult must ask themselves. "What do we have control over?" The answer is simply "we have control over the liberties to the child. It's part of their being and we cannot touch that but give them the right to act within boundaries, and how to act in a certain way. A good visual representation would be the "Ripple Effect or Cause and Effect." (see picture below)

"We toss pebbles "knowledge" into the water "child" watch how it Ripples outwards and then continues effecting the water as it Progress further and further out.

This is defined by 3 things:

- 1.) Limit
- 2.) Consequences
- 3.) Responsibility
