Zhou dynasty 1046-256 BC supplanted the Shang and introduced the concept of the Mandate of Heaven to justify their rule. The central Zhou government began to weaken due to external and internal pressures in the 8th century BC and the country eventually splintered into smaller states during the Spring and Autumn period. These states became independent and warred with one another in the following Warring States period. Much of traditional Chinese culture, literature, and philosophy first developed during those troubled times. In 221 BC, Qin Shi Huang conquered the various warring states and created for himself the title of Huangdi or emperor of the Qin, marking the beginning of imperial China. However, the oppressive government fell soon after his death and was supplanted by the longer-lived Han dynasty (206 BC-220 AD). Successive dynasties developed bureaucratic systems that enabled the emperor to control vast territories directly. In the 21 centuries from 206 BC until AD 1912, routine administrative tasks were handled by a special elite of scholar officials. Young men well versed in calligraphy, history, literature, and philosophy were carefully selected through difficult government examinations. China's last dynasty was the Qing (1644-1912), which was replaced by the Republic of China in 1912 and, in the mainland, by the People's Republic of China in 1949. Chinese history has alternated between periods of political unity and peace and periods of war and failed statehood, the most recent being the Chinese Civil War (1927-1949). China was occasionally dominated by steppe peoples, most of whom were eventually assimilated into the Han Chinese culture and population. Between eras of multiple kingdoms and warlordism, Chinese dynasties have ruled parts or all of China. In some eras, control stretched as far as Xinjiang and Tibet, as at present. Traditional culture and influences from other parts of Asia and the Western world carried by waves of immigration, cultural assimilation, expansion, and foreign contact form the basis of the modern culture of China.

Communication and Cooperation in Early Imperial

China Charles Sanft, 2013-12-12 This revealing book challenges longstanding notions of the Qin dynasty China's first imperial dynasty 221 206 BCE The received history of the Qin dynasty and its founder is one of cruel tyranny with rule through fear and coercion Using a wealth of new information afforded by the expansion of Chinese archaeology in recent decades as well as traditional historical sources Charles Sanft concentrates on cooperative aspects of early imperial government especially on the communication necessary for government Sanft suggests that the Qin authorities sought cooperation from the populace with a publicity campaign in a wide variety of media from bronze and stone inscriptions to roads to the bureaucracy The book integrates theory from anthropology and economics with early Chinese philosophy and argues that modern social science and ancient thought agree that cooperation is necessary for all human societies

Early Chinese Empires and the People Without History Chuan-an Hu, 2017 Early Chinese Empires were colonial regimes The major aim of my dissertation is to elaborate on previous interpretations of cultural change and to highlight the negotiation of identity between imperial and local agents in a colonial context Colonial encounters not only have occurred in modern times but also in early Imperial China The state of Qin 778 BC 221 BC conquered the entire land of Sichuan 316 BC This region may well have been Qin's first colony before it finally unified China and created an empire 221 BC Forceful military acquisitions of the land and the construction of a colonial landscape reshaped the indigenous cultures. The adoption of the metropolitan cultures traditionally recognized as sinicization continued for more than five hundred years. In the past historians have tended to view cultural change under Qin and Han colonial rule as a normative process by which the superior metropolitan cultures were passively accepted by the naturally inferior local peoples of ancient Sichuan. However the society of ancient colonial Sichuan was dynamic composed of complex interactions among mobile individuals and groups. Local and metropolitan identities emerged nearly simultaneously. Micro and macro identities developed in close relationship with each other and were mutually constitutive. The peoples in ancient Sichuan were not merely sinicized but rather that they often played an active role in constructing their local cultural identities within greater imperial world. Studies of ancient China often take cultural contact as monolithic and portray China as a state empire with a monotonic voice. This dissertation seeks to deconstruct the Sino centric identity through the investigation of the contact between China and her neighbor ancient Sichuan. I see the cultural contacts as a set of diversified uneven and heterogeneous interactions rather than a one way process. This dissertation deploys an interdisciplinary approach to address this question and to produce a critical synthesis based on the methods of history and archaeology. It analyzes textual sources in the form of standard histories local histories and inscriptional evidence and material cultures from burials and other sites. These approaches are well integrated with each other and will be used in both macro and micro contexts. Several expressions of identity are examined including local intellectual agency ritual practice and the compilation of local history. Age of Empires Art of the Qin and Han Dynasties is a revelatory study of the dawn of China's imperial age delving into more than 160 objects that attest to the artistic and cultural flowering that occurred under Qin and Han rule. Before this time China consisted of seven independent states. They were brought together by Qin Shihuangdi the self proclaimed First Emperor of the newly unified realm. Under him the earliest foundations of the Great Wall were laid and the Qin army made spectacular advances in the arts of war an achievement best expressed in the magnificent army of lifesize terracotta warriors and horses that stood before his tomb seven of which are reproduced here. The Han built on the successes of the Qin the increasing wealth and refinement of the empire reflected in dazzling bronze and lacquer vessels ingeniously engineered lamps and sparkling ornaments of jade and gold from elite Han tombs. But of all the achievements of the Qin Han era the most significant is no doubt the emergence of a national identity for it was during this time of unprecedented change that people across the empire began to see themselves as one with China as their
