Dissertation writing is an arduous task that many students find daunting. It requires extensive research, critical analysis, and the ability to articulate complex ideas coherently. The process can be overwhelming, especially for those who are new to academic writing or lack experience in conducting independent research. From formulating a research question to drafting multiple chapters and defending the findings, the journey of writing a dissertation is long and challenging.

One of the main difficulties students face is managing their time effectively. Balancing coursework, job commitments, and personal responsibilities alongside the demands of dissertation writing can be extremely challenging.
