In this study, the researchers used a combination of cell-based assays and molecular modeling to identify the specific residues involved in the interaction between CD6 and the receptor. The results showed that the interaction between CD6 and the receptor is mediated by a hydrophobic cluster of residues, including Val31, Ile32, and Val33. The researchers also found that the interaction is dependent on the presence of a specific post-translational modification, namely, a palmitoylation site at residue 34. The results of this study provide new insights into the molecular mechanisms of CD6 signaling and may have important implications for the development of new therapeutic strategies for diseases such as cancer and autoimmune disorders.
