Abstract

Background: The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for cardiovascular disease between men and women who had been exposed to asbestos.

Methods: A cross-sectional study was conducted among 1000 men and 1000 women who had been exposed to asbestos at work. The prevalence of risk factors for cardiovascular disease was determined by questionnaire and physical examination. The prevalence of risk factors for cardiovascular disease was compared between men and women who had been exposed to asbestos.

Results: The prevalence of risk factors for cardiovascular disease was higher in men than in women who had been exposed to asbestos. The prevalence of smoking, hypertension, hyperlipidemia, and diabetes mellitus was higher in men than in women who had been exposed to asbestos. The prevalence of coronary artery disease was also higher in men than in women who had been exposed to asbestos.

Conclusion: The prevalence of risk factors for cardiovascular disease was higher in men than in women who had been exposed to asbestos. This suggests that exposure to asbestos may increase the risk of developing cardiovascular disease in men.
