Weaving Intellectual Property Policy In Small Island Developing States:

Weaving Intellectual Property Policy in Small Island Developing States Miranda Forsyth, Susan Farran, 2015

Pacific Island countries are examples of small island developing states which face internal and external pressures to develop their economies through trade and investment in a global market Integral to this is compliance with legal regimes often not of their own making Among these are laws relating to intellectual property which are imposed both by bilateral and multilateral Free Trade Agreements and by discourses of development Against the local regional and international context this book takes into account the importance of culture to indigenous societies the social relevance of intellectual property and traditional knowledge and national and regional strategies for encouraging innovation and creativity Informed by a number of case studies the book explores alternative models and approaches for creating an intellectual property framework that is geared towards meeting the particular needs of Pacific Island people in a rapidly changing world The book focuses on fourteen Pacific Island countries but the issues raised and solutions proposed have resonance for all Small Island Developing States and also many least developed countries Subject Intellectual Property Law The Elgar Companion to

Intellectual Property Protection and Development Miranda Forsyth,2016 Intellectual property regulation taken at its broadest level is concerned with the production access to use of and control over knowledge and a wide range of other intangible resources These include but are not limited to inventions ideas songs designs aspects of cultural heritage and genetic resources All such intangible resources are vital to the operation and development of any society They are crucial to issues as diverse as the development and dissemination of new technology the creation of artistic productions and the observance of ritual practices This paper is concerned with the impact of intellectual property laws on development in countries in the global South particularly focusing on the small island states in the Pacific islands region It is based on the observation that much of the literature and policy on intellectual property and development proceeds on the basis that there is only one model of each namely the global model of intellectual property underpinned by the World Trade Organisation s Agreement on Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights TRIPs and a neoliberal development framework which is informed by a belief in free trade open markets privatization deregulation and support for the private sector I argue conversely that there are multiple models of both These other models however tend to be obscured by the dominant narratives around development and intellectual property that lead to the universalisation of the models and approaches from the global North Exposing the plurality of models should enable a far more creative and multidimensional approach to intellectual property policy in developing countries particularly those whose levels of technological development and social structures are very different to those where the global intellectual models and frameworks have been and continue to be created This argument is interrogated by focusing on a particular developmental problem facing many small island developing states namely sea transport Part one of the paper briefly explores the problem of sea transport the way in which it has been addressed to date within the dominant development paradigm and the intellectual property issues this gives rise to Part two of the paper then turns to investigate an emerging new developmental approach to sea transport and identifies the very different range of intellectual property issues that arise through considering the issue through this lens Through this discussion I illustrate the ways in which new approaches to intellectual property are being forged at local as well as national and international levels and also challenge the distinctions being drawn between the regulation of so called traditional knowledge and modern knowledge The Library Journal Book Review R.
