

Accuracy of South Bend Lathes

Each Lathe Must Pass a Series of Rigid Tests

Precision accuracy is built into every South Bend Lathe. From the planing of the lathe bed to the final testing of the finished lathe, the highest standards of inspection are maintained. Sixty-four major tests are made on each lathe during the process of manufacture. The illustrations on this page show a few of the more important tests. The maximum variation allowed on any of these tests is .001".

Spindle Alignment—Vertical Plane
The alignment of the headstock spindle with the V-ways of the lathe bed is tested in the vertical plane with a test bar and dial indicator.

Tailstock Center Height
The height of the tailstock center is tested with a dial indicator and a precision test bar mounted between centers, as shown above.

Saddle Cross Slide Test
The saddle cross slide dovetail is tested for accuracy by machining the face plate and then testing with a dial indicator.

Spindle Alignment—Horizontal Plane
The alignment of the headstock spindle with the V-ways of the lathe bed is tested in the horizontal plane as shown in the illustration above.
