

Hybrid-variant recognition is a process of identifying and classifying variants in a sample based on their sequence profile. This process involves several steps, including initial screening, sequencing, and analysis of the data. The goal of this process is to identify variants that are different from the reference sequence and to determine their frequency and distribution.

- Initial screening: This step involves identifying variants that are different from the reference sequence. This can be done using various methods, such as sequencing, mass spectrometry, or bioinformatics tools.
- Sequencing: This step involves sequencing the variants identified in the initial screening. This can be done using various methods, such as Sanger sequencing, next-generation sequencing, or capillary sequencing.
- Analysis: This step involves analyzing the sequencing data to determine the frequency and distribution of the variants. This can be done using various methods, such as bioinformatics tools or statistical analysis.
