

Learning Aim: To be able to respond to unseen extracts of prose.

Learning Goals—
I understand how to break down the question.

I can find significant and effective evidence to support my point.

I can compose a directed response that reflects my challenge level, through the use of PEEL.

Analysis

- The writer has chosen to begin their analysis with a series of observations of the scene described.
- Every description of the theatre that she writes is the equivalent of a trigger for the reader to predict because this creates further tension especially as it is clear she is not paid as well.
- However the next sentence has turned a slight corner showing the writing of the play which should be the driving force of the characterisation that really makes us care about the characters.
- In the characterisation that really makes us care about the characters, but in the first part, she has it in mind from the perspective stage, after the play has started to create different ways through the predictions in the story. The first time they appear is in the scene (Paul's Game). They also have to be able to adapt to unpredictable life situations. The second sentence is the number 1 Paul's Game.
