

U.S. Congress

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The legislative branch is the branch of the federal government that is responsible for making laws. It is composed of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

The House of Representatives is the lower house of the U.S. Congress. It is composed of 435 members, each representing a congressional district. The Senate is the upper house of the U.S. Congress. It is composed of 100 members, each representing a state or the District of Columbia.

The House of Representatives is elected by the people of each state. The Senate is elected by the people of each state, but each state has only two senators. The House of Representatives has the power to initiate and pass bills, while the Senate has the power to approve or reject bills passed by the House.

The House of Representatives also has the power to impeach and remove federal judges and other officials. The Senate has the power to confirm or reject appointments made by the President. The House of Representatives also has the power to declare war, while the Senate has the power to ratify treaties.

The House of Representatives and the Senate work together to pass laws. A bill must be passed by both houses of Congress before it can become law. The President has the power to sign or veto bills passed by Congress.

The House of Representatives and the Senate are both responsible for representing the interests of the people. The House of Representatives is more directly elected by the people, while the Senate is elected by the people of each state. The House of Representatives is also more powerful than the Senate in many ways, including the power to initiate and pass bills.
