Part 1

The Girl Child

Chapter one

This chapter is about the girl child Akoko. It is set in the homestead of Chief Odero Gogni in Yimbo, a place in Siaya District, Kenya. The time is before the arrival of colonialists. As it is, chief Odero holds a hereditary position, administering in consultation with a council of elders (Jondongoi). He is expecting another baby and "knows" "it is another frock for my sling", a son to fight his wars. However, the chief gets a baby girl, Obura Obanda (Akoko), who nonetheless, grows up to be a striking beauty attracting a bundle of suitors.

Chapter two

One morning, a young man arrives at Chief Odero Gogni's compound, accompanied by his clan members. He has come to seek Akoko's hand in marriage. He is Owour Kembo; a young man, twenty years of age, who has just inherited chieftdom after the sudden death of his father. He is wifeless, which means that if he marries Akoko, she will hold the envied position of mikayi; the first wife.

In this society, it is the father who decides who marries his daughter. The suitor and his group therefore see the chief who has the council of with him. The chief likes the suitor, however, he has to show his pride; this is the first born daughter. He asks for a bride price that is enough to marry three wives -thirty head of cattle. Surprisingly, Owour Kembo does not object despite discouragement from some of his clan members. When they reach an understanding, the girl, Akoko, is brought. She is expected to be the picture of shyness with eyes fixed on the floor. On the contrary, she gazes at Owour. Owour seems to fall in love with her immediately.

When Akoko leaves the room, there is merry making. The new in-laws then leave with a promise that the thirty head would be brought on the fourteenth day of the following moon.
