Impact of the Education Level of Voluntary Prekindergarten Teachers Upon Kindergarten Student Readiness Rates Teresa A. Wright, 2012 This study addressed the problem of insufficient information concerning the impact of variability in requirements and credentials for Florida Voluntary Prekindergarten VPK teachers statewide on VPK program quality This study examined the variance in the professional credentials of VPK lead instructors in Florida school districts and whether or not this variability makes a significant difference in program quality as measured by VPK Provider Kindergarten Readiness Rates Analysis of variance ANOVA and analysis of covariance ANCOVA statistical tests were conducted as appropriate for each of four research questions Research findings indicated there was no statistically significant difference in the mean VPK Provider Kindergarten

Readiness Rates based on the professional credentials for VPK lead instructors when controlling for the socio economic status of the children enrolled at each site Recommendations were made for future research to replicate the study using a different indicator of program quality perhaps a measure of student progress throughout the school year Also the first groups of students to participate in Florida s voluntary prekindergarten VPK program are now enrolled in upper elementary grades making a longitudinal study both feasible and worthwhile in evaluating the effectiveness of a large scale preschool program The researcher further recommended that the idea of improving the qualifications of the prekindergarten workforce must persist supported by continued research and adequate funding Child Care Accreditation in Florida Florida.

Lipsey,Kerry G. Hofer,Carol Bilbrey,Dale C. Farran,Nianbo Dong,2012 Relatively few rigorous studies of the effectiveness of contemporary public prekindergarten programs have been conducted despite the growing number of programs and large monetary investments they require. The study on which this presentation is based was launched in partnership with the Tennessee State Department of Education's Division of School Readiness and Early Learning to provide an assessment of the effects of the statewide Tennessee Voluntary Prekindergarten (TN VPK) program on the readiness for kindergarten of the economically disadvantaged population it serves. Research studies have reported the rapid neurological, cognitive, and social-emotional growth that takes place during the first five years of life and the positive effects of high-quality early childhood educational programs. In recent years, however, TN VPK has become a controversial program in Tennessee, with some legislators expressing doubts about its value in the context of severe budget shortfalls and still others referring to it even more skeptically as expensive babysitting. This study interleaves a longitudinal randomized control trial (RCT) and an age cutoff regression discontinuity (RD) design to evaluate the effectiveness of the TN VPK program. Though the project is still underway, this presentation will summarize results for two cohorts of RCT participants.

Evaluation of the Tennessee Voluntary Prekindergarten Program Mark W. Lipsey, Kerry G. Hofer, Nianbo Dong, Dale C. Farran, Carol Bilbrey, 2013. In 2009, Vanderbilt University's Peabody Research Institute, with the assistance of the Tennessee Department of Education's Division of Curriculum and Instruction, initiated a rigorous independent evaluation of the state's Voluntary Prekindergarten program (TN VPK). TN VPK is a full-day prekindergarten program for four-year-old children expected to enter kindergarten the following school year. The program in each participating school district must meet standards set by the State Board of Education that require each classroom to have a teacher with a license in early childhood development and education, an adult-student ratio of no less than 1:10, a maximum class size of 20, and an approved age-appropriate curriculum. TN VPK is an optional program focused on the neediest children in the state. It uses a tiered admission process with children from low-income families who apply to the program admitted first. Any remaining seats in a given location are then allocated to otherwise at-risk children, including those with disabilities and limited English proficiency. The current report is the second in a series that presents findings from this evaluation. The prior report described outcomes at the end of the pre-K year for the children in the Intensive Substudy sample who participated in TN VPK in comparison to those who did not participate. The present report summarizes the longitudinal effects of TN VPK on kindergarten outcomes and those first-grade outcomes that are currently available. At the end of prekindergarten, TN VPK effects could be examined only on early achievement measures and teacher ratings of academic skills and behavior obtained at the very beginning of the kindergarten year. A notable addition in this current report is that results are now available on several other non-cognitive academic outcomes, including grade retention, attendance, recorded disciplinary actions, and special education services.

The Impact of Voluntary Pre-kindergarten on the Academic Achievement and Kindergarten Readiness of Students in a Large Suburban School District Jordan J. Rodriguez, 2013. Throughout the United States, state governments are allocating millions of dollars to support

Voluntary Pre Kindergarten VPK programs Recent research has indicated that students who participate in VPK demonstrate higher academic achievement scores across a number of subject areas Moreover VPK participants are more likely to enter primary school on grade level which in turn leads to a reduction in grade retention Studies have indicated that although all students who participate in VPK programs benefit from such programs minority students and students who come from low socioeconomic backgrounds benefit at an even higher level The intent of this study was to determine to what extent if any a VPK program within a large suburban school district impacted the academic achievement and kindergarten preparedness of participants in comparison to students who did not participate in the VPK program offered by the district To measure the impact student scores on the 2006 2007 Florida Kindergarten Readiness Screener FLKRS were compared through the use of an independent samples t test The same students had their 3rd grade Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test FCAT Reading and Mathematics scored compared as well Two groups were compared against one another The control group was a group of students who did not participate in the VPK offered by the school district The treatment group was the group of students that participated in the district offered VPK The results of each of the independent sample t tests conducted determined that there was not a statistically significant difference in either student preparedness or student academic achievement between the VPK participant group and the non participant group
