Volvo 80 Hauler A 21 is made up of two main parts engine unit and body unit. The two units are connected through the frame joint which allows movement in both planes. Movement round the vertical axis provides the articulated steering. Movement round the horizontal axis allows the two units to move independently of each other to allow for unloading in the ground.

The main parts of the engine unit are a six cylinder direct injection diesel engine with a gearbox which together with the transmission, clutch and oil are suspended through rubber mounts in the frame. The frame is sprung relative to the drive axles.

The trailer has a permanent four-wheel drive, longitudinal differential lock in the gearbox and differential lock in each of the drive axles.

The body unit consists of frame, hydraulic dump body and single suspended drive axles (not on A21). On the "Soft" version the bogie consists of one drive axle and one trailing axle, whereas the "Hard" version has two drive axles.

Differences between "A 21" and "20241 B"

With effect from year no. 4000 - the Volvo 80 Hauler "20241 B" is sold under the trade name "A 21". However, the type designation is still 20241, which is what is given on the type plates.

The major differences are:

An engine with intercooler has been introduced as standard. A transmission with built-in retarder is available as optional extra. A new version of the hydronic hydraulics has been introduced on the full machine with effect from year no. 4000.
