Voluntary Method Liked; Inability To Pay Not To Prevent Any Inoculation

WASHINGTON, D.C.—President Eisenhower said today that giving up control of inoculations for federal employees and other citizens is the best way to prevent any kind of panic distribution of the polio vaccine, but said it should not be mandatory.

The president said in news conference the government has no way to check any kind of panic inoculation.

Washington's new health and welfare program, the Social Security Act, has been blamed for many outbreaks of polio.

President Eisenhower said yesterday that the administration will continue to do its best to prevent any kind of panic inoculation.

He said the government will do its best to help people who are afraid to get inoculated.
