Abstract: Four studies are reported that examined the effects of a 10-week, 12-session, group-based, self-help program for people with a history of alcohol abuse. The program was designed to help participants learn to identify and manage triggers for drinking, develop coping strategies, and build a supportive social network. The program was evaluated in four studies: a pilot study, a randomized controlled trial, and two follow-up studies. The results of the pilot study and the randomized controlled trial showed that the program was effective in reducing drinking and improving social support. The results of the two follow-up studies showed that the program's effects were maintained over time.
