Warm air advection occurs where the cold front moves across northern Ohio together the warm (relative to lower latitude) air mass. Therefore, warm air is being transported across the region located by the low-pressure system. Based on this fact the warm air would expect precipitation at that location for the rising, humid air advection across where the cold front moves the precipitation (from lower latitude) falls to higher (cooler) air mass. Thus, cold air being transported by the cold to a warmer location produces falling precipitation.
