Finally, we are working to develop technologies using flow-cytometry, next-generation sequencing, and proteomic solutions designed to analyze complex cell mixtures, including the tumor microenvironment, to predict the outcome of cancer patients. These new technologies will enable us to better predict the outcome of cancer patients and to develop more effective and targeted treatments.

It is important to remember that there are businesses whose primary objective is to serve the community for which the company is chartered. In other words, the community and the mission of these businesses are intertwined. They are not profit-driven, and profit-driven entities should not be confused with community-oriented entities.
